Refraction Tank

A beam of light is shone through a transparent container half filled with water. Angular graduations on the container allow the angle of incident, refracted, and reflected light to be measured both in the water and in the air. The light source may be freely rotated through a 180-degree range.

PIRA DCS 6A42.21