A permanent bar magnet is moved in and out of a coil connected to a projection galvanometer. One can observe how the magnitude and direction of the current changes with the direction and velocity of the relative motion.