A large capacitor is discharged through a small coil resulting in induced current and a magnetic field strong enough to blow a can apart.