A test tube is smashed with a hammer and the pieces are poured into a clear container of glycerine. Then, due to magic or the similar refraction indices of glass and glycerine, the broken pieces of glass disappear and a previously-invisible, intact test tube is removed from the container.