An opaque disk placed in the path of a spatially-filtered laser beam casts a bright spot in the center of its shadow. A diffraction pattern consisting of a series of concentric rings is also visible since the incident light is monochromatic.